1 The United States Food and Drug Administration FDA Be Smoke free and Help Your Pets Live Longer Healthier Lives RAWSEP View This FDA article is about tobacco smoke so these adverse effects on pets are different from any wood smoke adverse effects on pets Excerpts edited by RAWSEP for brevity and clarity and relationship to Residents Against Wood Smoke Emission Particulates a 501C3 nonprofit organization Animal Health Literacy What can smoking do to my pets? What can smoking do to my dog? What can smoking do to my cat? What can smoking do to my pet bird? What can smoking do to my pet fish? One study showed that even when homes of smokers were cleaned and prepared for sale thirdhand smoke was still present in the dust and on household surfaces months after someone had last smoked in the homes What can smoking do to my pets? Scientists are investigating the effects of tobacco smoke on pets but the amount of information available is small compared to the amount available about the effects of smoking in people Still the information we do have is important and sheds some light on what happens to pets exposed to secondhand and thirdhand smoke What can smoking do to my dog? For dogs that already have breathing or lung issues inhaling tobacco smoke can worsen their symptoms and chronic coughing Dogs can develop changes in their airways and lungs that are like those found in people who smoke Ultra fine smoke particles can activate the immune system of people A type of white blood cell in the lungs involved in this immune response is called an alveolar macrophage Alveolar macrophages watch what comes into the lungs and if they detect something abnormal they phagocytize or eat it to get rid of it People who smoke therefore have an increased number of alveolar macrophages because their bodies are trying to get rid of all the tobacco smoke particles in their lungs Dogs exposed to tobacco smoke also have an increased number of alveolar macrophages some of which contain black smoke particles likely for the same reason How tobacco smoke affects a dog depends on the length of the nose of the dog Why? Because noses are big air filters The hair and mucus in your nose and the mucus in your sinuses act like glue traps They trap particles like dust pollen and tobacco smoke and keep them out of your lungs Bigger noses therefore will trap more particles This holds true especially in dogs Long nosed dog breeds like Greyhounds Borzois and Doberman Pinschers that are exposed to tobacco smoke have a doubled risk of nose cancer Their noses filter out a lot of inhaled tobacco smoke particles which stay trapped in their noses so less get into their lungs Unfortunately this puts the tissues inside the nose and sinuses in contact with a lot of toxic cancer causing particles leading to the increased risk of nose cancer Short and Medium nosed breeds like Pugs Bulldogs Beagles and Brittany Spaniels have a higher risk of lung cancer Why? Because their noses are much shorter fewer tobacco smoke particles get filtered out and more go directly into the lungs Those ultra fine particles like to go deep into the lungs leading to the increased risk of lung cancer Back to the top What can smoking do to my cat? Cats are careful groomers which keeps them looking beautiful But grooming can be a bad thing for cats living in a smoking household Cats breathe in secondhand smoke directly just like dogs When cats groom themselves though they also ingest thirdhand smoke particles that fall onto their fur Studies show that cats living in smoking households have a two to four times increased risk of an aggressive type of mouth cancer called oral squamous cell carcinoma The cancer is often found under the base of the tongue where the thirdhand smoke particles tend to collect after grooming. Of the cats that develop oral squamous cell carcinoma less than 10 percent will survive 1 year after diagnosis even if they have had chemotherapy surgery or radiation treatment. Microscopic view of cat oral squamous cell carcinoma tumor. Cats that live with people who smoke more than one pack of cigarettes a day have three times the risk of developing lymphoma a cancer of the immune system of the body similar to non Hodgkins lymphoma in people. The typical survival time of a cat with lymphoma even with chemotherapy or surgery is six months. What can smoking do to my pet bird? Birds are very sensitive to air pollution especially tobacco smoke. They can develop changes to their respiratory system similar to those seen in children exposed to tobacco smoke. Birds that live in a smoking household breathe in secondhand smoke. And like cats birds like to groom or preen themselves. When they do so they ingest thirdhand smoke particles that have coated their feathers. Birds are also exposed to thirdhand smoke by perching on the clothes or hands of their owners and absorbing the harmful particles through their feet or by preening the hair of their owner and ingesting the particles. Birds that live with smokers can develop irritated sinuses pneumonia allergies lung cancer feather plucking eye problem skin abnormalities heart problems and or fertility problems. Some of these conditions like pneumonia lung cancer and heart problems can cause death. Other conditions like allergies and feather plucking can be difficult to treat if the bird is not removed from the smoky environment.

2 Lost science in America. Excerpts edited by RAWSEP for brevity and clarity and relationship to Residents Against Wood Smoke Emission Particulates a 501C3 nonprofit organization. The New York Times Climate Newsletter. October 10, 2025. By most metrics, 2025 has been the worst year for the American scientific enterprise in modern history. Since January, the Trump administration has made deep cuts to the science funding in America, including more than 1 billion dollars in grants to the National Science Foundation, which sponsors much of the basic research at universities and federal laboratories and 4 point 5 billion dollars to the National Institutes of Health. Thousands of jobs for scientists and staff members have been terminated or frozen at these and other federal agencies, including the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Environmental Protection Agency, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the National Park Service. To thousands of researchers, veteran scientists and new grad students at state universities and Ivy League institutions alike, these sweeping reductions translate as direct personal losses. Each may mean a layoff, a shuttered lab, a yearlong experiment or field study abruptly ended, graduate students turned away, lost knowledge, lost progress, lost investment, lost stability, dreams deferred or foreclosed. This government upheaval is discouraging to all scientists who give their time and lend their brilliance to solve the problems beleaguering humankind instead of turning to some other activity that makes a more steady living. Gina Poe, a neuroscientist at the University of California, Los Angeles, wrote in an email, "Next year looks to be worse. The 2026 budget proposed by the White House would slash the National Science Foundation by 56 point 9 percent, the NIH by 39 point 3 percent and NASA by 24 point 3 percent, including 47 point 3 percent of the NASA science research budget. It would entirely eliminate the US Geological Survey 299 million dollars budget for ecosystems research, all US Forest Service research 300 million dollars and at the NOAA Office of Oceanic and Atmospheric Research, all funding 625 million dollars for research on climate, habitat conservation and air chemistry and for studying ocean, coastal and Great Lakes environments. The Trump administration has also proposed shutting down NASA and NOAA satellites."

that researchers and governments around the world rely on for forecasting weather and natural disasters. The American Association for the Advancement of Science has estimated that if the administration succeeds in its plans to cut the 2026 federal science budget to 154 billion dollars from 198 billion dollars, a 25 percent reduction, it would represent the smallest amount that the federal government has spent on science in this century. The result would essentially end the longstanding role of America as the world leader in science and innovation. A senior vice president for government relations and public policy at the Association of American Universities said in July, "The Times has been asking dozens of scientists from across the country to describe what has been lost as a result of these changes. Their first person accounts for this series, which you can read here, will appear regularly over the coming weeks, including in this newsletter. Has your scientific work been cut? We want to hear about it. Our emphasis was primarily on heat in cities, which are getting hotter, not just because of climate change, but because of infrastructure, which creates an urban heat island effect. Fundamentally, we were trying to learn about these systems to prevent people from dying unnecessarily from heat." Said a professor of atmospheric science at Northern Arizona University, "Gurney had grants to build greenhouse gas monitoring systems around three American cities. With this grant, I also wanted to understand which time window of exposure is most important for menstrual health: prenatal, childhood, or adult. Our early results showed that the first trimester of pregnancy is a time to be especially concerned about air pollution and temperature." Said an associate professor of environmental, reproductive, and the health of women at the Harvard School of Public Health, "She had a federal research grant to study how air pollution can affect fertility in women. The Trump energy cuts punished mostly blue states. Red states might be next. The cancellation by the Energy Department of 7.5 billion dollars in Biden era awards for clean energy projects is poised to cause significant job losses and disruptions. Leaders of several states have said even as internal documents suggest that the agency may be contemplating deeper cuts in the months ahead. The Energy Department termination of more than two dozen grants in New York State alone would threaten more than 1,000 jobs and nearly 500 million dollars in investments in the state, according to figures compiled by the office of Governor Kathy Hochul, a Democrat. At the same time, many lawmakers and companies fear that the Energy Department could soon cancel even more funding, including for projects in Republican-led states, such as funding for two large projects in Louisiana and Texas that aimed to remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere." IN ONE CHART: A horizontal bar chart of the cost to drive 100 miles, with bars for electric cars, gas cars, hybrid gas cars, standard and electric car fast charging. The New York Times: How much it costs to drive an EV and a gas car in every state. A writer compared the costs of filling up a gas-powered car with the cost of charging an electric vehicle. Charging an EV battery is usually cheaper than going to the gas pump. But it depends on where you live. Driving 100 miles in a typical gas car that gets 25 miles per gallon costs about 13 dollars on average. In an EV, you would pay just 5 dollars, if you recharged at the average home electricity rate, which is cheaper than stopping at a fast-charging station. Miller had just been asked a question about the Trump legal authority to deploy federalized national guard troops The Stephen Miller initial response was to cite title 10 of the federal code and then to assert that this gives the president plenary authority to direct those troops as he sees fit Title 10 is the general military law of the armed forces While it does not use the term plenary authority or plenary power the administration relies on its text to assert wide ranging authority to use the military The executive also relies on article II section two of the US constitution which states the President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the Militia of the several States when called into the actual Service of the United States Does the president actually have plenary authority over the military?
